

CALL FOR PROPOSALS | SPECIAL ISSUE: Qualitative Pastoral Research

February 9, 2022
Call for Proposals
Journal of Pastoral Theology
Special Issue: Qualitative Pastoral Research

Dear Colleagues,

You are invited to submit proposals for articles in a special JPT issue featuring original qualitative research projects grounded in pastoral theology. We are looking for full-length articles (approximately 8,000 words) that do one of two things:

1. Provide a full account of a research project, including methods, findings, and pastoral-theological implications.

For a good example, see:

Erin Raffety, Kevin Vollrath, Emily Harris & Laura Foote (2019) Lonely Joy: How Families with Nonverbal Children with Disabilities Communicate, Collaborate, and Resist in a World that Values Words, Journal of Pastoral Theology, 29:2, 101-115, DOI: 10.1080/10649867.2019.1621024 or:

2. Reflect on a particular aspect of a larger study (perhaps one you published elsewhere or one that is still in progress), highlighting its implications for pastoral research, practices of care, or pedagogy.

For a good example, see:

Dave Csinos, "From Pioneer to Partner: Dismantling White Normativity in Ethnographic Theology" in Religious Education (2020) 115:4, 400-412, DOI: 10.1080/00344087.2020.1738622

Please send your proposals, including a title and an abstract of up to 200 words to the editors by April 1, 2022. The articles themselves will be due on September 30, 2022. If you have any questions, please contact the editors.

Your editors,
Danjuma Gibson
Mary Clark Moschella